Historic Events January and February

January

On January 1, 1995, Sweden joined the European Union. A vote was held earlier in November to decide whether the country would join the EU. The results were close with 52.3% of voters saying yes to EU membership and 46.8% voting no. Turnout was high - 83.3% of the population voted. Swedes were skeptical toward the EU currency, the euro. The political parties agreed they would not switch to the euro unless a referendum showed the majority of Swedes wanted to use the new currency. A referendum was held in 2003 where 55.9% of voters rejected the idea. Recent poll results indicate that 78% of Swedes would vote no today.

February

On February 30, 1712, the Swedish calendar, which had been in use since March 1700 was abolished. In 1711, King Charles XII decided that Sweden would switch from using the Swedish calendar to the Julian calendar. To do so, days had to be added to the end of some months. This necessary modification gave February 1712 a total of 30 days. Sweden would switch to the Gregorian calendar later in 1753, one year after England. This switch would require the country to leap from February 17 to March 1 that year. Read more here:
